at or near the ~~East~~ Cape, on the main land.

After Yemmaranqua had heard of the fate of his sister (who was taken at the same time), he sent spies toward the East Cape to ascertain the particulars, and the situation of the people who had killed her. Yemmaranqua's spies travelled as traders, all along the coast; and when they returned, they brought information of what had become of these two women: one had been killed and eaten on an island, and the other on the main at a greater distance.

Yemmaranqua set off to revenge the death of his Sister, as already stated; and Hunghee followed when he was ready. They both returned, without meeting, after taking vengeance on the respective people who had committed the above murders; and the Heads which
