

character and situation of the New Zealanders are considered, and such fields in the Pacific Ocean ^{are} whitening already for Harvest I have no doubt but many will cheerfully contribute to raise the Islanders from their deplorable state of Barbarity and Superstition. I am informed that the character of the Nations of Owhyhee is much improved by their intercourse with Americans. Perhaps some Missionary will be in time induced to volunteer his services for the spot which witnessed the fall of Captain Cook.

Should it ever please God so to increase the Missionary Spirit, that a general attempt may be made to establish Settlements of one, two or more Missionaries in the numerous Islands of the South Sea, or in the largest of them, I believe the work might be accomplished at a much less expence, and with greater ease than any plan
