

22 90

A Blacksmith, and ^{another} Schoolmaster would be of great service at New Zealand. You mention the probability of sending out some Lutheran Clergy.
In the selection of Missionaries you will no doubt be regulated by circumstances, but if a Clergyman of my own Country could be prevailed on to come we could better cooperate in fixing the native language, as we should better agree in method and arrangement of letters than two persons who had been accustomed to speak different languages.
The Committee I hope will impress it upon the minds of those they send, that they cannot enter into private trade while they are on the Society's Settlements. Every thing ought to belong to the Society. By attending to the general good and prosperity of the Settlements we should all be more likely to live comfortably at our post. By attending to individual interests we should wreck the Settlement to pieces.