

I conceive from your letter that no objections will be made to send out my salary in goods, such as I may write for, provided they are sent through Mr Marsden's Hands. I shall be very content with this method. I shall now have an opportunity to obtain at English Prices such articles as may suit me, which I could not possibly do on an investment sent to Mr Marsden. I shall give you as little trouble as possible and shall keep no account current, but shall order as many necessaries, as will reach amount to a years salary. I have not drawn Mr Marsden for any salary for the present year I proposed, nor do I intend it the next.

I am rather straitened for time at present, the Acton having returned from Otterdale & about to sail for Port Jackson. I have sent for my two daughters by the next conveyance.

Yours Good Dear Sir
 Your faithful Servant
 Tho Kendall

Remember a
 School Bell