

them the Head of their friend. If upon this his enemies began to cry, there would be no battle. The Heads would be exchanged, presents mutually made, to each other and peace be established. If on the other hand, the people at the North Cape should resist, or attempt to fly, the battle would commence immediately. Shunghee took an affectional leave of us all here, told me that if he fell I was to be good to his children, and if I died he would take care of my family.

March 2nd Returned part of Shunghees Party. Interruptions

4th Several scholars absent at the funeral of a Chief who died yesterday.

5. Returned Shunghee. He told me he had met with a great disappointment. As his people were at Wangaroo into which place they had fled to rest and refresh themselves, a quarrel had taken place between his party and a party of the Wangaroo natives. Four of the latter had been shot, and one in return. Of those from the town Thames. He said he was afraid the Wangaroo People would come upon us in his absence, he therefore had given up the Expedition for the present. The Bodies of the
