My very Dear Sir,

I have the pleasure to inform you that we had a fine passage in the ship to Port Jackson where I found all my family well, and daughters shortly after at the first table. I had suffered much anguish of mind when at the Island at the very hurried day which I have entertained of my children - my spirits were more provoked than at any thing I had met with in life. They devote their time to instruct the ignorant and to guide the poor wanderer - no wicked insinuations will ever cause me to relinquish my labors for the good of these Islanders - and I bless God that he has rewarded me with such a pleasing reward & hope will attend me to the grave. Your son Samuel is very steady - and behaves well. I think his visit to Parvanna will be of great service to him - He has no companions to lead him wrong - and he sees none but the best of characters this colony affords - I think you will find him more inclined to do all you wish when he returns to you - He is just treated as if he was my own son - and is under no painful restraint - and free from care - and will do well I have no doubt.

with respect to myself I can say but little as yet - I have not seen the Governor since my return, nor am likely to see him. How matters will end I cannot tell as yet - but I think I shall convey my Point - our difference
