

much attention to the language; and is as much esteemed amongst the Native Inhabitants as any man can be, but he like the rest had got into a nefarious traffic with the shipping, which excited a spirit of covetousness and mutual jealousy, and gave Satan an advantage over him.

~~Mr. Kendall was resolved to do all he could in future, and I believe his heart is in the work and he greatly laments what has taken place - Mr. William Hall candidly acknowledged they were all wrong, but as for his part he was ready to obey any instructions that might be given him, and to give up all future traffic with the shipping. He is a most industrious man, a mechanic of great ability, and has done much for the improvement of the settlement but had from the love of money got greatly out of the path of duty. It is hardly possible to conceive that men of piety can act so inconsistently with their duty, as the settlers have done at New Zealand, yet the fact is undeniable. As William Hall was so ready to acknowledge his errors, and to return to the path of duty, I could do no more than pass over his <sup>mis</sup>conduct with some suitable admonitions - during my stay at New Zealand no man could exert himself more for the good of the settlement than he did, and I have no doubt but Mr. Butler will find an able assistant in Mr. Hall in establishing the new settlement - John King when I~~

This Mission has had much to contend with both at New Zealand and Port Jackson and if it had not of God it would long since have come to naught. but nothing can be more promising than the general appearance of the Mission, as far as respects the Natives. they are all ready for instruction and there is no difficulty or obstruction on this account. Mr Kendall was resolved to do all he could in future, and I believe his heart is in the work and he greatly laments what has taken place - Mr. William Hall candidly acknowledged they were all wrong, but as for his part he was ready to obey any instructions that might be given him, and to give up all future traffic with the shipping. He is a most industrious man, a mechanic of great ability, and has done much for the improvement of the settlement but had from the love of money got greatly out of the path of duty. It is hardly possible to conceive that men of piety can act so inconsistently with their duty, as the settlers have done at New Zealand, yet the fact is undeniable. As William Hall was so ready to acknowledge his errors, and to return to the path of duty, I could do no more than pass over his <sup>mis</sup>conduct with some suitable admonitions - during my stay at New Zealand no man could exert himself more for the good of the settlement than he did, and I have no doubt but Mr. Butler will find an able assistant in Mr. Hall in establishing the new settlement - John King when I