

Suspicionaries here ought not to be treated by each other like Ministers in England when they do not enjoy ~~their~~ equal share of their such privileges.

I have shewn you Sir how easy it is for some Men to deceive themselves and others in their censures in the manner which has been adopted in my own case.

We shall all Sir, stand before the judgement Seat of Christ. Every one of us must answer for ourselves. We can put no cloak upon our own faults. Neither shall we have time to be severe with each other. The eyes of ^{us} all will be fixed upon one person.

May God disappoint the designs of the Devil, who has long been struggling to part us, to torment us, and to prevent our usefulness among the Heathen.

Having now said all I wish to say, I shall make no more concessions to Man, who is a guilty creature like myself.

I desire to trust in God and not to fear what Man can do unto me.

I am

Rev^d Sir

Your faithfull Servant

Thomas Kendall
