

Governor Macquarie of what they had done. - While the Principal Chief and his party remained on board, the boat returned with Quattera and the rest that had gone in her. -

Quattera and the principal Chief seemed well acquainted, and were very polite to each other: the most friendly salutations past between them, and Quattera, being now comparatively very rich, made several presents to his friends, as did the other chiefs who had come with me from Sydney. -

Quattera renewed the conversation relative to the firing upon the Jefferson's Boats, and laid the strongest injunctions on them not to injure the Europeans in future but refer their complaints to the Governor of N. South Wales. - This was one of the most interesting and pleasing days I had ever enjoyed, I was never more amused and gratified than upon this occasion.

Before evening we had an abundant supply of fish, hogs and potatoes.

I informed the natives, we should sail that night for the Bay of Islands.

They pressed us much to stop another day, and they would bring us more, hogs, potatoes, and fish. -
