they struck their paddles, and their skill, in struggling for the superiority. - One man in each canoe gave the signal, for every stroke, which changed every few seconds, sometimes the strokes were long and slow, at others short and quick. - In a little time we reached the Actue. - On Monday morning previous to leaving the vessel I directed that the settlers, their families and every thing belonging to them should be landed, as soon as the building was ready for their reception. On my return I found Mr. Kendall and his family were on shore, and every preparation made for Dr. Hall and King. -

As I intended to sail either for Whang<sup>ona</sup> or the river Thames as soon as the Brig was cleared, I went on shore to make the necessary arrangements for my departure. On landing I was informed that a Chief named Werrie (nephew to the late Tippakee) was very much enraged and had beat his wife, in consequence of finding a nail in her possession. -

The nail had excited Werrie's jealousy, which caused him to demand where she had got it; she told him that a man belonging to the Actue had given it to her as a present. - Werrie could not be persuaded that any man would give his wife so valuable a present, as a nail, unless her conduct had been improper. - I.
