

to the active, either insulted or injured any of their people, he or they should be punished. — After this business was settled Mr and Mrs Hall were landed with the remainder of the stores.

On the following morning, Friday the 13th, Mr and Mrs King were also landed, and the vessel supplied with water and wood, to be in readiness for sea. —

About 3 p.m. we weighed and sailed down the harbour; it was my intention if the wind permitted, first to sail for Whangorua, having been invited by several of the inhabitants of that place who had come to Rangitikee, since the peace was established. —

I had Quatera and Korokoro, with 25 New Zealanders, as a guard on board they were very fine young men, and could be depended on, — Many of them being the sons of chiefs on both sides of the harbour. — I thought it prudent to take a sufficient number of men, in case any difference should happen to arise, either at Whangorua, the river Thames, or at any other part of the coast, at which we might touch. —

When we got to sea, the wind was fair for Whangorua, and we directed our course thither; but, when we came over to the Cavalles, the wind suddenly <sup>changed</sup>
