

We here found some pretty little cottages and their gardens in high cultivation, well laid out and neatly fenced in.

The potatoes and yams &c were planted in separate beds, and no weeds were to be seen in these plots of ground.

In passing through the village I observed a man's head stuck on a pole in the front of the cottage; the chief stole silently from behind me and took it down and then carried it into the hut; he was not aware that I had observed it and by his cautious conduct, I concluded, he was desirous I should not; on which account I took no further notice but passed on.

It was from this village a messenger had been sent for Sam the Stationer who had not yet returned. - We walked about two miles into the interior on the path by which Sam was expected to pass, and a number of natives attended us.

We saw on our way some beautiful plantations of potatoes and other vegetables; - The women appeared as if they were little acquainted with Europeans
