

for the insult, and he should refuse to give up the pots till the compensation was given. I told him that Mr. Hall was not to be punished for what Mr. Kendall had done; and that the pots ought immediately to be restored to the owner. Shoudee O'Gunna was willing to give them up; but his Brother demanded an axe; not as a favour, but as a reward for them. We conceived that if we complied with this demand, it would open the door for future robberies; and, therefore, told him that he might keep the pots; for we would not purchase them, because they were stolen.

Shoudee O'Gunna was much hurt at his brother's conduct; and, in the course of the following week, they differed seriously. Shoudee O'Gunna, in order to show his disapprobation, set his own house on fire, and burnt it; and left Banghee-hoo, with a determination to return no more to
