Shodeewhy had been wounded. Shodeewhy and his men marched five abreast, all naked & armed, with him by their side. His Wife marched in front, with a long spear in her hand; and her Daughter in the rear, waving a white mat, as a flag.

There appeared 300 of Shodeewhy's tribe in this body; their spears were very long, more than twenty feet. The men marched in a very close body; and Shodeewhy, with a long spear, regulated their movements. When they came opposite to Thatanghee's party, Shodeewhy and some of his men plunged into the river. Thatanghee's party made a sham opposition to their landing, and the whole scene closed with savage shouting and dancing. Old Harrocmaddoo led on Thatanghee's party. When the public confusion was a little over, Shodeewhy and the hoary Warrior rubbed noses, as a token of reconciliation; but Thatanghee refused this salutation, and appeared sullen.
