

there was but one God, and that our God was their God also. - I went up to the sick man's shed, and knelt down. - He crept out on his hands and laid himself down on his side, uncovering his thigh, and, laying his hand upon the affected part, looked wistfully at me, as if he thought I had the power to heal him. - His conduct called to my recollection what Naaman the Syrian Leper thought of the prophet, namely, that "he (the prophet) would stand and call upon the Lord his God, and strike his hand over the sore, and so recover the leper" - The Ideas of the wounded Chief, and those of Naaman, appeared to me, to bear a great similarity to each other. -

After I performed this duty, which deeply impressed my own mind, under the peculiar circumstances, I was called upon to address the Father of all mankind; who is gracious to every man, and whose "tender mercies are over all his works", - I told Rowhow that it was my intention to return that day. - He urged me to stay one day more, saying he was very weary, and could not well go back with me, till he had recovered from his fatigue, - I observed, that if I did not go I would lose my passage to the ship, and should then be deprived of the means to return, as a Canoe could not cross the river in the then unsettled state of the weather. -

He saw the force of this argument, and said tho' he was tired, he would go back with us; and we immediately took leave of the sick Chief, and his people; and proceeded on our journey. - Several slaves were sent to
