Morning to Evening. In the Evening I took tea with Mr & Mrs. Hemblin. They have some native domestic servants whose minds are deeply impressed with the importance of eternal things, as well as several others, residing with Miss<sup>rs</sup> Kemp, and Clarke. I was much gratified with Mrs. Hemblin's account of her female servants. The word of God has produced a powerful effect on their minds; and the communication of the Spirit both in convictions & consolations appear to me to be very remarkable. Yet their experience seems to be perfectly agreeable to the experience of some of the Heathens in the Apostolical times.

About 7 o'clock I returned to my room where I lodged at Mr. Kemp's. He informed me that there were several young men & women who wished to have some conversation with me upon religious subjects, and I received them with pleasure. Twelve in number immediately entered, and their anxious countenances, bespake the inward workings of their minds. Their object was to learn what they were to do to be saved. I endeavoured to represent to them the love of Jesus in coming from Heaven to die for a ruined world, and for them as well as for Europeans. I gave them many instances of his love to poor sinners like themselves, when he was upon Earth - such
