

1823 Aug 27

they should - I told her I did not believe that Shungee would be angry when he returned for he had no cause - This old chief and his family could not bear the idea of Mr. Thendalls leaving the Island, because he had been the chief support of the whole of them, and they were sensible of the loss they would sustain when he went before I left them I promised the old chief a few presents and his sons, and we parted mutual friends -

Aug 28

Monday 28<sup>Aug</sup> Early this morning I sent for Warrickook - one of Shungees Principal Officers in the late War between him and Enamtree, chief <sup>at</sup> the River Thames, in order that I might learn the origin and event of the War; when he gave me the following account -

Several years ago a vessel from Port Jackson took a young woman from Wangaree a chief's sister named Tammaroo-go, and carried her along with them by force to the Southward, where they sold her to another chief for some Mats. The chief who purchased her, took her for his wife, but she did not like him, in consequence of which the chief put her to death - Sometime afterwards the ship King George belonging to Port Jackson was at or near the East cape when a native came on her to the Bay of Islands