battle at the River Thames was a second, a chief who had fallen in action at Terra-hakkee, and another great chief who had died a natural death at Gambiers River - Shungee had a long conversation with Mr Kemp before he went about Mr Wendall - He told Mr Kemp that Mr Wendall had purchased the Brampton's long boat for him to go to War with, that Mr Wendall intended to come to live at Juddie Juddie. Shungee said we ought to pardon him now and supply him with what he wanted from the Society's stores, and if we did not he should be very angry, for Mr Wendall was his friend, and had done much for him - Mr Kemp pointed out to Shungee the impropriety of Mr Wendall's conduct, which was the cause of our withdrawing support from him - Shungee said, we acted very different from them, for if one chief took another Man's wife, they had one fight, and there was an end of it, but we continued our anger - Mr Kemp wished to know how he was to act, if Mr Wendall made application for supplies - I directed that if he (Mr Kemp) apprehended any evil consequences would follow from a refusal, he was to comply with Mr Wendall's application, if the stores would allow of his being supplied on Mr Wendall paying for the articles he obtained - Should Mr Wendall refuse to pay for them, and demand them as a right, and should Shungee interfere Mr Kemp in that case would do right
