That the missionaries came only for their good & when they wished them to leave New Zealand, they should - I told her, I did not believe that Shinghee would be angry when he returned, for he had no cause. This old Chief and his vanity could not bear the Idea of Mr. Kendall leaving the Island because he had been the chief support of the whole of them and they were sensible of the loss they would sustain when he went - before I left them I promised the old Chief a few presents, and his sons and we parted mutual friends -

Thurs. 28 -
Cause of war

Early this morning I sent for Murreport, one of Shinghee's Principal officers in the late war between him & Enakhee, Chief of the Kaiti-Maories, in order that I might learn the origin and event of the war - when he gave me the following Account -
Several years ago a vessel from Port Jackson took a young woman from Wangaree, a Chief's sister named Imuwan-go, and carried her along with them by force to the Southward, where they sold her to another Chief for some goods. The Chief who purchased her took her for his wife; but she did not like him, in consequence of which the Chief put her to death. Sometime afterwards the ship King George belonging to Port Jackson, was at or near the East Cape
