help in his studies, which have never been discontinued, though of course his employment during the last five years has not been favorable to their prosecution. If any further particulars should be required concerning him, I shall be most happy to furnish them; and in the mean time, hoping the society will find in any young relation an instrument, suited to the views, I remain, my dear Sir, with unfeigned respect and esteem, your faithful friend and servant,

Edward Garrard Marsh.
