X The Society's Missionaries at New Zealand being under an heathen government, where there are no established laws for the protection of their property it is necessary for me to acquaint you that all packages sent from this Country to New Zealand ought to be of such a weight and dimensions, that they may be removed without difficulty, and without being unpacked from the boats or canoes to the houses of the Missionaries.

The Stoves designed for one settlement ought not to be sent to another; because the Natives of the Village to which they are sent, and the surrounding neighbours, expect that all axes, hoes &c. landed amongst them, are also to be expended amongst them. I have long since acquainted you through Mr Marsden
