

of Misses Hall & King, and said they had behaved very ill to Mr Kendall, who was their best friend. what hurt the Chief was, he could not now have his wants supplied as formerly when his daughter had the keys of the stores in Mr Kendalls House. Mr Kendall & his wife are awfully fallen.
Mr Hall is an excellent mechanic, and a very industrious man; but he wants that pious feeling, that tender compassion for the Heathen which constitutes the very essence of a missionaries Character - He has taught many of the natives to saw, but has never taught one of them to sharpen a saw, I have often been very much hurt, at this, and have said much to him upon the subject - until a native is taught how to keep his saw in order, he can never be of much benefit to himself or others. This neglect is a very great disgrace to Mr Hall - His hear is low during so, I never could learn, neither has he taught any of them to make even a bar, or a wheel barrow.
The natives have saved the principal part of the timber that has been used in the buildings, but have not been instructed in any thing more - Mr Hall has been injured by his interference with the shipping in trafficking with the ships one way or another - He was tempted to this by the Example of Mr Kendall, and his strong love
