

A Mr. Francis Hall leaving New Zealand. His conduct to the natives was rude, and unchristian--like. I have often wondered that they have not taken advantage of his Anger, and Peppor, and committed some Act of Violence upon him. His son and he used to be continually quarrelling; to the great disgrace of the Christian name. When I went down to New Zealand with Mr. Butler and his colleagues at the first, the father and son had such violent differences, that I did not think it safe to leave young Mr. Butler there, and brought him back with me to W. S. Wales. In about 18 months he returned to his father, when their differences began again. The young man visited W. S. Wales a second time - got married to a very young girl, and returned to his father with his wife.
They all soon quarrelled again, and when I arrived, Mr. Butler was employed in prepar-ing materials for a large suspension bridge for his son on the opposite side of the river - There was no school, nor likely to be any. This was very distressing to my mind - Mr. Butler had got a very expensive
